Random thoughts from the editor:

Covid will "disappear" and "go away" when it gets warmer, how'd that work out? Oh, he later added "sometime"! Now re the wildfires "it'll get cooler", what about future years? They'll "get cooler" too, after yearly destruction while you mouth off ignorance and inanity?

Trump did not want to tell people anything that would make them panic, because it worked so well on the Titanic.

Trump is stoking a civil war and promoting more violence just in case he loses an election while promoting a third term, holding indoor rallies the medical profession has said will murder more Americans, destroying trusted institutions and alliances, all benefiting no one but him and Russia.

Another day, another resignation, a scandal or 2, or more!

Roger Stone Calls For Trump To 'Declare Martial Law' To Seize Power If He Loses

Free speech ok, but this is way over the top!

Trump Says He Will 'Negotiate' Third Term Because He's 'Entitled' To It

The height of arrogance, ego and entitlement, a verbal constitutional slap in the face because what he wants is more important than the constitution. 2/3 of both houses he's going to "negotiate" with? Good luck on that one!

2 years of tax credits (how will that help the unemployed), school choice provisions, liability protections to limit Covid lawsuits (of course) and increased charitable contribution deductions (bet business owners going out of business will be so grateful for that one)! Won't get thru the Senate, much less the house = more nothing.

Covid relief bill failed again with no help foreseen until maybe new Congress in 2021. Are the unemployed, small business owners facing closure and government employees facing layoffs really going to vote for this administration and Republicans who refuse to compromise? Democrats have passed a 3T bill and offered to meet in the middle at 2T vs the 1T offered by Republicans. The only "help" was payroll tax cut, which hurts SS, doesn't help unemployed and must be repaid.

Apparently Biden is not the one who wants to "defund the police".

So Trump on tape admitting to Woodward on 2/7 that Coronavirus was highly contagious, airborne, dangerous and 5% deadly vs 1% flu, on 3/19 that it's "young people too", while telling us it would "disappear", was a "hoax", on tape 2/27 stating flu was more deadly and that CV didn't present an imminent danger, as late as August stating publicly that kids aren't affected. Does he ever NOT contradict himself? Mush brain or deliberate? Mattis re Trump "no moral compass". Kushner re Trump "crazy, aimless, stubborn and manipulative." Coats re Trump, although can't prove it, believes Putin has leverage over him. Trump admitted airborne 1/27, but we didn't know for months!

Synopses, commentary and quotes from Cohen's book...

'Cohen describes himself as an "active participant" with Trump in activities ranging from "golden showers in a sex club in Vegas" to corrupt deals with Russian officials.

The author offers new anecdotes about Trump's utter disregard for other people and his contempt for religious belief. Cohen's words should shock the believers who were crucial to his becoming president, provided they ever read them.

By denouncing the book Trump has ensured that many of those he has tricked into believing he is a deeply religious man will never fulfill their Christian duty to be on the lookout for deceivers.

None of the evangelicals I have interviewed in the past five years knew Trump has denounced in writing their beliefs and written of the communion host as "my little cracker."

Trump detests Christianity

Despite the irrefutable evidence that Trump detests Christianity and ridicules such core beliefs as the Golden Rule and turning the other cheek, America is filled with pastors who praise him to their flocks as a man of God. Trump himself has looked heavenward outside the White House to imply he was chosen by God.

Pastors who support Trump were scolded two years ago by Christianity Today, a magazine founded by Billy Graham, for not denouncing Trump as "profoundly immoral." Many evangelical pastors then attacked the magazine rather than following the Biblical exhortation to examine their own souls.

Cohen writes that as a young man who grew up encountering Mafioso and other crooks at a country club he fell into the "trance-like spell" of Trump, whom he describes as an utterly immoral, patriarchal mob boss and con man.

Trump is "consumed by the worldly lust for wealth and rewards," Cohen writes, which puts him at odds with the teaching of Jesus Christ about what constitutes a good life.

"Places of religious worship held absolutely no interest to him, and he possessed precisely zero personal piety in his life," Cohen writes.

Prosperity gospel embraced

Cohen explains that the only version of Christianity that could possibly interest Trump is the "prosperity gospel." That is a perverse belief that financial wealth is a sign of heavenly approval rooted in 19th Century occult beliefs that is anathema to Christian scripture.

Many actual Christians regard the prosperity gospel as evil. Christianity Today, calls it "an aberrant theology" promoted by disgraced televangelists including Jimmy Swaggart and Jim and Tammy Baker.

Early in Trump's aborted 2012 presidential campaign, Cohen writes, he was ordered to reach out to faith communities. Soon Paula White, now the White House adviser on faith, proposed a meeting at Trump Tower with evangelical leaders. Cohen writes that Trump liked White because she was blonde and beautiful.

Cohen said that among those attending were Jerry Falwell Jr., who recently resigned in disgrace over sex and greed allegations as head of Liberty University, and Creflo Dollar, who solicited donations for a $65 million corporate jet and who was criminally charged that year with choking his daughter. Dollar said those charges were the work of the devil.

Once the evangelical leaders took their seats, Cohen writes, Trump quickly and slickly portrayed himself as a man of deep faith. Cohen writes that this was nonsense.

Laying on hands

After soaking in Trump's deceptions, the leaders proposed laying hands on Trump. One purpose of laying on hands is to call on the Holy Spirit for divine approval.

Cohen was astounded when Trump, a germaphobe, eagerly accepted.

"If you knew Trump as I did, the vulgarian salivating over beauty contestants or mocking Roger Stone's" sexual proclivities "you would have a hard time keeping a straight face at the sight of him affecting the serious and pious mien of a man of faith. I knew I could hardly believe the performance or the fact that these folks were buying it.

"Watching Trump I could see that he knew exactly how to appeal to the evangelicals' desires and vanities – who they wanted him to be, not who he really was. Everything he was telling them about himself was absolutely untrue."

To deceive the evangelicals, Cohen writes, Trump would "say whatever they wanted to hear."

A perverse epiphany

Trump's ease at deception became for Cohen an epiphany, though a perverse one.

In that moment, Cohen writes, he realized the boss would someday become president because Trump "could lie directly to the faces of some of the most powerful religious leaders in the country and they believed him."

Later that day, Cohen writes, he met up with Trump in his office.

"Can you believe that bullshit," Trump said of the laying on of hands. "Can you believe that people believe that bullshit."

Cohen also writes about Trump's desire, expressed behind closed doors, to destroy those who offend him. Trump has said the same, though less vividly, in public.

"I love getting even," Trump declared in his book Think Big, espousing his anti-Christian philosophy: "Go for the jugular. Attack them in spades!"

He reiterated that philosophy this year at the National Prayer Breakfast. Holding up two newspapers with banner headlines reporting his Senate acquittal on impeachment charges, Trump said, "I don't like people who use their faith as justification for doing what they know is wrong. Nor do I like people who say, 'I pray for you,' when they know that that's not so."

Trump spoke after Arthur Brooks, a prominent conservative, told the breakfast meeting that "contempt is ripping our country apart."

Brooks went on: "We're like a couple on the rocks in this country....Ask God to take political contempt from your heart. And sometimes, when it's too hard, ask God to help you fake it."

Everyone in the room rose to applaud Brooks except Trump, though he finally stood up as the applause died down.

Taking the microphone, Trump said, "Arthur, I don't know if I agree with you... I don't know if Arthur is going to like what I'm going to say."

Trump then said he didn't believe in forgiveness. That is just as Cohen wrote: "Trump is not a forgiving person." Trump's words at the prayer breakfast made clear that he rejects the teaching of Jesus at Luke 6:27: "Love your enemies, do good to those who hate you."

The question pastors should raise in their Sunday sermons, the question Cohen's book lays before them, is how can any Christian support a man who mocks Christianity, embraces revenge as his only life philosophy and rejects that most basic Biblical teaching—forgiveness.'

America is Having the Mother of All Social Collapses

If American Life Feels Frightening, It's Because It's Imploding — In Gruesome and Catastrophic Ways—Umar Haque

It's genuinely terrifying to be an American these days. And a baffled world is looking on in horror, shuddering and wondering: "What the? What have Americans let happen to their society? What if that happens here?"

What is "that," exactly? America is having is the Mother of All Social Collapses. It's hard to put into words because it really is something strange, new, unprecedented, shocking, gruesome. It's like a major earthquake — it's going to redefine the world's fault lines for generations to come.

I say that because Trump's America, I noticed, was trending on Twitter. In response, people had written all kinds of funny, snarky, depressing, angry rejoinders.

But it seemed impossible, maybe, to encapsulate it all. The scale and scope of what America's become, the bottomless depth and towering height of the failure of a society like this.

Trump's America is many things. Even I struggle to express the extent of the calamity in words by now. It's a place where mass death is an everyday affair. Trump's America is a plague state, wracked by illness and disease. Trump's America is an economic trainwreck. It's a society whose social bonds have been blown apart by hate and brutality and selfishness. It's a budding police state — those "federal agents" are coming to your streets. It's a collapsing nation — one imploding into authoritarianism, poverty, disease, and death.

Like I said, even I struggle to put it into words. But the economist in me can express it much more succinctly and precisely.

When I say "The Mother of All Social Collapses," I mean it. Trump's America is a society that combines all the strands of social collapse that we know if — and then some. Yes, really.

Economically, Trump's America is Soviet. Politically and socially, it resembles Nazi Germany. And culturally, it's Taliban-esque, aggressively retrograde. That's a lot of ruin for one country, which is why it's so hard to put into words. It really is breathtaking and staggering when you think about it.

Let me begin with the economy — how Trump's America is Soviet.

Its intellectual class seems incapable of processing much, or even any, of the above. As long as billionaires are getting richer, and the stock market's rising — what's the problem? Like the Soviet Union, America has a strange set of measures for the health and prosperity of a society, which don't seem to account for anything that actually matters, whether happiness, wealth, stability, safety, or sanity. And like the Soviet Union, only paying attention to those self-created indicators of a kind of ideologically self-defined success has made America incapable of grasping the tiniest shreds of truth, like the fact that American life sucks for most people now.

Like the Soviet Union, Trump's America is a place that can't provide the basics for people anymore. Like decent jobs — 50% of Americans now work "low wage service jobs," which is today's jargon for: the menial work of servants to the rich. Like the basic good of public health — America has the world's worst Coronavirus outbreak by a very long way, and it's probably not going away...ever. Like decent food or water, which, if you've lived in Europe or Canada, are of a whole different league. Like public safety — think of how many kids get shot at school, or how many women and minorities get abused at work. Like money — 80% of Americans live paycheck to paycheck. Like hope and optimism for the future, which keeps a society confident, buoyant, gentle, working together — Americans now expect life to get steadily worse. They're probably right. America can't provide the most basic of basics for people anymore, from medicine to money to jobs to public health to safety. There's no deeper way in which a society can fail.

Wait, let me correct that. There is one deeper way. The lights can go out. A society can turn dark.

That brings me to the next thing Trump's America is. It's also pretty, well, Nazi. Yes, Nazi. Look, before you react angrily to that, sputtering into denial let me say one thing: the entire world thinks this. I'm only sharing with you what every single person who's not American says to me every single goddamned day. From my friend Ben the grizzled London copper to my friend Art in Hong Kong to all my friends in Canada, Europe, and Africa. It's the very first topic of discussion I have with a baffled and horrified world. Americans are the only ones who are still in denial about it.

Trump's America is pretty Nazi. Come on — it's not exactly hard to see. Concentration camps, kids in them, kids in cages in them, family separations, raids, bans, purges, hate, dehumanization, and so on. Who else does that? Accountants? Sure, sometimes, but when they do, they've become...Nazis.

We're all taught about Nazism over and over again from the time we're little kids, over and over again, so that it sinks into us. But while the entire world is now like "Wow, America turned kind of Nazi, huh?" by and large, within America, that's still somehow a controversial proposition. You get the blank look from Americans when you say the word fascism — the one that everyone who's not American knows, when the mind shuts down, when a truth too dangerous to utter has been spoken. Of course, that's also fascism.

Trump's America is a place where the denial of the good people runs rampant. Nazis? What Nazis? Where? Denial is a crucial element is a society turning politically Nazi. When I say "America resembles Nazi Germany politically and socially," I don't just mean the Trumpists — I also mean the regular old American who's the only person left on planet earth who's still in denial about it, like the good German of the 1930s.

What Americans didn't seem to understand is that these Nazi institutions would soon be used against them, too, if they didn't speak up against them. And now here we are — where the shock troops who once hunted hated immigrants are now beating and abducting American Moms off the streets, and gassing Mayors of Cities. That's what denial does: it enables.

What happened in Nazi Germany was what political scientists politely call a "silent majority." Today, America has one. And for some baffling reason, Americans seem to think a silent majority is a good thing. That a polite majority who say nothing is proof of some kind of civilized nature. Nothing could be more wrong. "Silent majority" is not a compliment. It's an insult! It's a disappointment, a condemnation. You don't want a silent majority in a society. A silent majority paves the way for every kind of authoritarian implosion under the sun, from fascist to theocratic to kleptocratic to all of them put together.

In the Islamic World, the silent majority is what let the fundamentalists and fanatics take over, and wreck societies that were once democracies. In Nazi Germany, the silent majority is what let the Nazis seize power, and then abuse it. In the Soviet Union, the silent majority is what let the communist machine wreck everyday life and society.

Let me say it again, because I think it's important. Americans seem to have been taught that a silent majority is a wonderful and noble thing, like some kind of sleeping dragon, who'll suddenly awaken, and defend the land from the barbarians. It's not. A silent majority is not a good thing for a society to have. A patient on life support having a stroke.

It's what we call that part of a society who is too scared, frightened, weary, or willfully ignorant to live up to their responsibilities as citizens of a democracy.

A silent majority is a bad thing, not a good one. It's a negative. It's not a sleeping dragon, it's more like one that's passed out, drunk, while the barbarians set fire to the citadel. It's a sign that a society has one of the final elements necessary to implode, which is...acquiescence, cowardice, or indifference, or maybe all three.

That brings me to the next thing Trump's America is. Fanatical. While the good people are a silent majority — and again, that's not a good thing — the American Idiot apparently wants to make America look, ironically, a lot like the Islamic world he purportedly hates. The American Idiot has flourished into a kind of weird Taliban of its own, demanding everything from control over women's bodies to refusing vaccinations to not teaching kids science.

Nowhere else in the civilized world can you go and find the kinds of bizarre "debates" you do in America — over things for which there really is no debate. Should people wear masks? Does evolution exist? Should women not be objects and possessions? Are minorities human beings? Is it OK for a society to be a place of constant abuse, cruelty, aggression, and violence? Should people have no healthcare? How about kids — should we teach them superstition, not science, and then arm their teachers, in case a mass murderer shows up? What the?

Americans don't quite get it, but nowhere else in the world is like this. The closest analogue I have is the Islamic world, where people also tend to debate poppycock and superstition intensely and seriously, as though teaching a kid that human beings evolved was somehow going to seal their fate in the afterlife. But even in the Islamic world, America's levels of everyday cruelty and aggression are hard to find — kids there aren't getting shot at schools, they're just getting turned into idiots.

The American Idiot has turned America into a society where idiocy of every kind flourishes. That's how the Islamic World imploded, too, by the way. It wasn't always like this — despite what you've heard. It used to be a literate, civilized, artistic, learned place. Then the mullahs arrived, the majorities fell silent — and the rest is history.

The American Idiot's story is much the same. He's pushed a kind of line of incredible cultural idiocy that rotted and broke the American Mind. Science was replaced with superstition, human decency with aggression, thoughtfulness with unthinking cruelty, knowledge with the ignorances of racism, misogyny, hate, and greed. Trump's election was the triumph of the American Idiot, and since then, stunning leaps in idiocy have been made.

Because the American Idiot has successfully made every kind of superstition and regression into a "debate," the result is that American can't...go anywhere. It's so busy trying to debate the American Idiot that it doesn't have time or energy left to learn. From a world that is now far more successful. Why is it that Europeans enjoy such vastly higher standards of living? Why don't they have to choose between their lives and their life savings? Why is it that Canadians have good health-care and decent pensions? But when you're busy "debating" whether, say, teachers should be armed or whether that secret police abducting moms and gassing mayors really is one...where can you go? Not forwards — only less backwards.

It feels frightening and surreal to live in Trump's America these days for a good reason. Because it is. America is having the Mother of All Social Collapses.

The social collapse Trump's America is having is a supercollapse. It combines the worst elements of all the social collapses that we know of. Hence, the Mother of All Social Collapses.

Economically, America is a weird mirror image of the Soviet Union — a society that's unable to provide basics for its citizens anymore, leaving them to battle each other for whatever morsels of a decent life they can, in a perpetual, daily, desperate, bitter battle for survival. Just like in the Soviet Union, negligence and irresponsibility has led to economic stagnation, the implosion of the middle and working classes into mass poverty and mass hopelessness...and now, finally, to mass death.

Politically, America resembles Nazi Germany — right down to the silent majority, not just the concentration camps and secret police. The silence of that majority baffles the world — while Americans seem to think a silent majority is a good thing.

Culturally, America is a cousin of the Islamic World, where crackpots and theocrats want to organize a nation as a crusade for salvation, not as a modern, functioning society, where an Army of Idiots that's an overly powerful minority has rendered any kind of social progress flatly impossible.

America's collapse is a real one, and a special one. It isn't just a Nazi collapse. It isn't just an authoritarian collapse. It isn't just an economic collapse. It isn't even just a cultural collapse into hate and backwardness and superstition. It's all those things put together.

The world hasn't really seen all that put together before. The Soviet Union didn't want to be a theocracy, and neither did the Nazis. The mullahs of the Islamic World wanted to provide basics for all — they weren't capitalists — mistaken as they were as to how go about it. And so on. America combines all the strands of social collapse that we know of, and then adds some of its own — like the idiocy of the non-mask-wearer or the anti-vaxxer or the Fox News addict.

It's honestly terrifying to be American these days. The world is closing its doors to us. The bodies are piling up. You can't have a decent life, it seems, no matter how hard you work — you'll never pay off those "debts." There's an Army of Idiots, led by a Psychopath-in-Chief, who think being able to carry a gun to Starbucks is a basic human right — but health-care isn't. Where will you go? What will you do?

Welcome to Trump's America.

You're living through the Mother of All Social Collapses. It might just last another four years —but if you don't do something, it might last for much longer still.
